DESSERT WINES

Different techniques:

Noble Rot / Pourriture Noble / Botrytis Cinerea: a very special fungus called Botrytis Cinerea attacks the grape and pierces the skin, allowing water to evaporate and thus concentrating the sugar. This is used in the famous region of Sauternes and Tokaji

Late Harvest: grapes are left on the vine for extra ripeness, then harvested at a later stage than usual, which leaves the wines with residual sugar after fermentation has finished. Examples: Vouvray, Auslese

Passerillage: originally made on a bed of straw, where the grapes were picked, then left to dry. As the water evaporates, the sugar in the grapes concentrates. Examples: Jurancon
Also it could be “passerille” on the vine, with the action of the wind to dry the grape. (i.e sometimes happens in combination with noble rot)

Mutage / Fortified: grape spirit is added to a fermenting grape must. This stops the fermentation by killing the yeast, leaving the wine with residual sugar. Examples: Port, Madeira, Banyuls

Eiswein: Harvesting when the water in the grapes has frozen during a cold, winter night or helping this natural process by modern technology, i.e. freezing the grapes – otherwise known as cryoextraction (but this is not allowed everywhere!!)
Examples; Eiswein

The first grapes were imported from Greece in the 15th century. It was in the 18th century that it became what it is today: a fortified wine suitable for drinking anytime. At first Madeira was a local version of Port, made with different grapes. It was soon discovered that the wine gained a special flavour after having been on a trade ship for some months, often en route to the Portuguese colonies in the East Indies. The reason turned out to be that the heating of the barrels of wine as the ships crossed the tropics gave the wines their distinctive Madeira “tang”: a freshness which, in the sweeter styles balances so well with the sugar.

The Madeira wine trade was developed by the British and the major wine houses were founded by Englishmen. Like Port, it was fortified from the early 18th Century, and was popular in England, though it has always been available in much smaller quantities than Port. Throughout the 18th and 19th Century, increasing quantities were shipped to the United States

Today, the heating, of the simplest wines is usually done artificially though most of the wines we list here are aged naturally in barrel – usually in warm lofts rather than cool cellars. The true Vintage Madeiras are still stored in oak casks for at least 20 years before bottling. Madeira wine is extremely durable, and for the best wines the older they get, the better they become. It is possible to purchase a Madeira that is up to 200 years old.

There are four distinct types of Madeira:

- Sercial which is the driest
- Verdelho is medium-dry
- Bual is dark and medium-sweet
- Malmsey is heavier and much sweeter
